Responsibilities to the Board and C-Suite

- The Board of Directors and C-Suite may not have a greater challenge today than cybersecurity, and yet many Boards do not have access to cyber expertise to fulfill their cybersecurity accountability.
- CIOs and CISOs have the responsibility to educate the Board on the status of their cybersecurity Program, and the highest probability, highest impact cyber risks facing the company so the Board and C-Suite can make informed decisions regarding cybersecurity investments.
- The Board and C-Suite can effectively support your cybersecurity program if they understand their accountability, the cyber risks to the company, the characteristics of a program to mitigate that risk and the true nature of the company's cybersecurity posture.

What it takes to have a Comprehensive Cybersecurity Program

- Technical Controls: based on an industry accepted framework such as NIST CSF.
- Incident Response Plan: ensure that it is well documented and practiced.
- Third Party Management Program: to ensure vendors are meeting expectations.
- Threat Intelligence Process: that informs real-time decision making to keep your plan current.
- Program Maturity Rating: the degree to which the program is documented, consistently followed, and kept current.
- Continuous Improvement: a roadmap for program improvement to address the greatest cyber risk.
- Executive Oversight: full engagement of the Board of Directors and C-Suite in cyber program strategy and governance.
